Financial Times: HHL graduates receive the highest salaries in Germany

The creators of the ranking examine the salaries three years after graduation. In this regard, HHL is ranked first in Germany, second in Europe and fifth worldwide, which represents a further improvement compared to the previous year.

The latest ranking by the Financial Times for 2021, which assesses Master in Management programs from universities around the globe, has once again awarded top places in Germany, Europe and worldwide to the education offered at HHL Leipzig Graduate School of Management.

According to the survey, HHL graduates receive the highest salaries in Germany. The creators of the ranking examine the salaries three years after graduation. In this regard, HHL is ranked first in Germany, second in Europe and fifth worldwide, which represents a further improvement compared to the previous year.

HHL's Career Service has also established itself among the world's best, once again reaching the top 10 with a 9th place globally. The school continues to rank among the top 10 worldwide in terms of graduates' overall satisfaction with their Master's program. In the overall global ranking, HHL reached 27th place. It finished ahead of a large number of well-known international universities and remains in the top 3 worldwide among the boutique business schools with less than a thousand students.

Prof. Dr. Alexander Lahmann, Academic Director of HHL's Master in Management programs, comments,

"We are continually working to adapt our programs to meet the current needs of students and the needs of business and society. The good rating in the renowned ranking shows us that we are going in the right direction. Therefore, we are thrilled about HHL's programs once again achieving these very positive results."

The FT Global Masters in Management Ranking is considered to be one of the most comprehensive and significant of its kind internationally for Master in Management programs. The ranking combines data from two surveys. One polls alumni from the universities who graduated three years ago. The other one uses information provided by the universities themselves, such as diversity of the student body or internationality of the programs.
